Hagen Schulz-Forberg is an assistant professor in International History at Aarhus University in Denmark. His main effort is the practice and dissemination of research in the field of global history. He wants to position the international studies part of the Institute for History and Area Studies into today's newly forming understanding and analysis of globalization.

Dr. Schulz-Forberg has published many of his researches, including Cosmopolitanism or Ethnic Homogeneity? (2010), Soft and Strong European Public Spheres (in press 2010) with B. Stråth, and Becoming Pan-European? (2010) with M. Brüggemann. His older published researches include Theoretical Paper on the Notion of a European Public Sphere (2005), Between the Uncomfortable and the Sublime (2008), and Claiming Democracy (2009).

Dr. Schulz-Forberg is currently researching "Conceptual History and Global Translations: The Euro-Asian Semantics of the Social and the Economic" with Bo Stråth, Renvall Institute, University of Helsinki, which focuses on the understanding of conceptualizations and imaginations of the social and the economic in various European and Asian languages; and "Zero Hours: Global Moments of New Beginnings in the Twentieth Century," which focuses on the development of the global order in periods where old systems had collapsed and new had to be established: 1918, 1945 and 1989.
